I was itching to play a water racing game similar to Vector's Hydrothunder Hurricane. They didn't do very well on this one: The physics are weird and it gets boring fast. The maps aren't very well designed for fast-paced racing and despite new vehicles being unlockable, they all feel exactly the same. At just under 5 hours I'm completely burnt out on the repetitive gameplay.. A great improvement from riptide gp 2 A vectot unit game with a story is a nice change.It has a need for speed fell to Riptide GP: Renegade.. This game is a fun arcade racing game that will challenge you even after you've maxed out your bike. The game is a bit grindy and some losses feel a bit cheap, but I had a lot of fun with it. If you played Riptide GP 2 (this game's prequel) you'll find that it's largely more of the same with better graphics and an actual story, and that's not a bad thing at all. The game runs very well on my relatively old (2014) laptop and works wonderfully with a controller. I don't think tricks would work as well with a keyboard though, so if you don't have a controller this game might be a bit harder than it should be, especially the stunt mode. The track selection is fairly good, the shortcuts aren't always obvious and there are plenty of unlockables to keep you busy. However, the game does repeat events many times to pad its length and it's a bit unnecessary, especially considering that you seem to get the best bike (IMO) somewhere in the middle of the campaign. In terms of modes, there's a career, a single race mode, a global challenge that amounts to time trials with a leaderboard, splitscreen and online multiplayer. Unfortunately, the online portion of the game is dead, and on splitscreen you can only chose from preselected track lists, so racing with other people is a bit limited. That said, the single player mode is worth the price of admission, so I won't hold the multiplayer against the game. All in all I think I got my money's worth and I recommend this game to any arcade racing fan.. I'm a Riptide GP 2 veteran here, so here are my two cents about this sequel I decided to change my opinion of this game as I put a little bit more hours into it. However, I still mantaining my initial observations about it. The difference is that I would recommend it now instead. The game has all the annoyances of previous titles in the series, without having any of the fun things that made those previous games enjoyable. It's still a game about grinding so that you can buy a bike and upgrade it, but now the bike gets nerfed down when entering races bellow the stage in which you acquired that bike. What the actual f$%k were these people thinking! However, there are plenty of events to keep you ocupied, that will tend to put you on the same tracks over and over again. The color palette on some races is super crappy, so you will find yourself racing in cities where the water is grey, the buildings are grey, the sky is grey, and the obstacles that knock you down from your bike are ALSO grey. There are three difficulties in the game, easy, medium, and hard. Hard is unbeatable, and the other two make you feel unaccomplished, effectively making the game pointless. I don't think I have ever been so angry with a game, and to further exacerbate this, I was (still am) totally hooked with GP2. Riptide GP2, this game's predecessor is a much more simple game, but orders of magnitude more fun to play. I still believe that most of the flaws in this game can be corrected with a simple patch though. So there is hope for this game still. The bikes are the coolest of all of the series, lookwise that is. And some minor story elements have been added to the game, so now you gain riders as well as bikes as you progress, each coming with their own mini story arcs that leads to exclusive races, open only to those riders. This would have been amazing if they would have put a little bit more effort into the monologs of these characters, as well as their stories in general. But the stories are so dumb, and the riders are so poorly written, that you can't really appreciate any of them. Awesome idea, just poorly executed. The game's still somehow fun to play, although not worth obsessing over with.. Definitely a very good game overall. Gave us some of thje challenge that I personally believe was missing from gp2. That said, it would be nice if the devs could work in a graphics mode that even remotely challenges high end machines, i.e revised shadows and super high res textures and landscaping.. Every weekend I would go to the mall with my dad and visit the arcade. Rush 2049, Hydro Thunder, and Arctic Thunder were my favorites. Big jumps, high speed, booming bass and a shaking seat with every crash to the ground. This game delivers on reviving that special butter smooth over the top fun of the late 90's.. I'd had this on my Wishlist for a while after looking for something to scratch that Waverace 64 itch, finally picked it up and ultimately I'm quite dissapointed. I'm a big racing game fan, and I'm pretty forgiving in the genre, but this fell totally flat for me. The environments and visuals are stunning, and there are a good number of them. This aspect of the game deserves praise. However the racing I found incredibly dull - right from the get-go. Immediately bored. I think it's a combination of factors to be honest, but I didn't find it challenging or exciting, it really lacks something - the stunts were more like quick time actions, and the general experience was more like being on a theme park. I tried out all the tracks available to me and they all felt more like dioramas than tracks - beautiful but I'm just kind of going round like I'm on a wobbly log flume. Ultimately I can't recommend a racing game I don't enjoy racing in, and this is one of the few I've experienced. And we need to talk about the water - because great water physics combined with clever track design could have redeemed things. Falling from a height is a very odd sensation, the water is clearly some kind of non-newtonian fluid - that all-important satisfying dip into the water simply isn't there. I'd have avoided drops altogether with the physics as they are, personally. The fact that there are 'slopes' of water, but no water movement is also bothersome, you're never contending with a current. Worse still there are corners with *banked* water - creative license taken a little too far there I think - it's starting to look like you didn't really want to make a jetski game. Dissapointing! But it seems a lot of the other reviewers enjoyed it, so it might depend on what you're after.. This is the sequel to Riptide GP2. I still feel that even though it's slightly better in every way, the original still holds its own. It looks good, plenty to unlock, controls well, sounds good and when you get into the groove of the game, you'll find yourself continually pushing your hydrojets to the extremes to get the speed, distance and height required for some insane tricks. The difficulty curve is pretty spot on and the whole experience is pretty satisfying. Sometimes it's on sale for $3 and it's worth every penny - even at full price.. WOW!!! Hydrothunder for the N64 is one of my all time favorite games. But this is even better. The sense of speed, kicking soundtrack, sheer number of tracks and upgrades will keep you coming back for a long time. As a casual gamer who grew up in the arcade, this is a nice walk down memory lane. Considering its only a half of a CD worth of information, goes to show how there is so much bloatware out there. This is a lean mean racing game with amazing use of water and particle physics. I assume this is an android port, but actually feels like an XBox360 game. On a side note, depending on what controller you are using or keyboard and mouse, the game automatically senses it and started telling you to press or , very nice touch, theres nothing as annoying to me the game telling me to press when I'm using a controller or vice versa. Kudos to Vector Unit! Also it supports ultrawide, huge plus for people like me.
